

TUM Honor Code

The TUM is one of the leading technical universities in the European Union and worldwide. It is renowned for its excellence in research and teaching, interdisciplinary education, and international diversity. The members of the TUM are known for their enthusiasm for science and technology, and their continuous seek of knowledge and improvement.

The TUM is more than a place for lectures and exams. In fact, it builds a family of students, scientists, research assistants, with various backgrounds, cultures, and interests. Many of these members meet every day on campus and share the same values of mutual respect, trust, and responsibility.

The “TUM Honor Code” is an ethical code of conduct, to which all TUM members pledge to adhere. An Honor Committee, selected by the students themselves, gets to decide on the rules and content of the honor code. Cheating, stealing, plagiarizing or misrepresentation can be considered as a violation of the code.

The honor code does not only insure an ethical and fair environment for all students. It is also a message to the teachers and faculty members, that they can trust the students and their submitted work as well. A common honor code should therefore strengthen the confidence between student and faculty and promote the academic integrity as a core value for our university.

Vote for the introduction of the “TUM Honor Code” and help to promote the spirit of trust and fairness among university members, leading to greater achievements and excellence at the TUM.
